

BEHAVIORAL & MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELING

TalkPath Live offers a variety of teletherapy services to schools nationwide, but perhaps none is more important for the special education child than counseling. One-on-one individual counseling, group counseling, social skills training, behavioral contracting, peer role modeling — it all plays a vital role in equipping school-aged students with the mental stability, security, emotional well-being, and support they need to grow and to thrive, inside of school and out, both academically and behaviorally.

Because different techniques prove most effective with different students, our pool of state-licensed therapists employ a variety of approaches when delivering online therapy; however, the cornerstone of our counseling model is cognitive behavioral therapy, not only because it is an evidence-based practice informed by empirical research, but because it's the most recommended line of treatment for children and adolescents. CBT is so effective in dealing with psychological issues and behavioral difficulties because it is solution-focused and action-oriented in the here and now, imparting practical skills thinking and disrupt destructive patterns. When connectedness of their thoughts, behaviors, and self-agency, empowerment, and confidence.
